Ask HN: Currently working on something on my own, should I seek co-founder? - jkeno A little background before I dive into my point. My name is Jens, I work on a Rails application. The application is very green and we just released version 0.1 which is currently in beta. My project is very different from my last project: It is a charity application trying to fund home for orphan children. It is a project based on the idea that the best way to help people is to let them be responsible for themselves, this applies to children and adults. A home helps parents to get to know the child/adult, looks after the children's and adults' education, and basically does everything to make the life better for the children and their families. You can read more about it on the website. As you can see, it is a very different project, I am working on it on my own, but I am no stranger to programming. In the mean time I have been reading lots of books about
